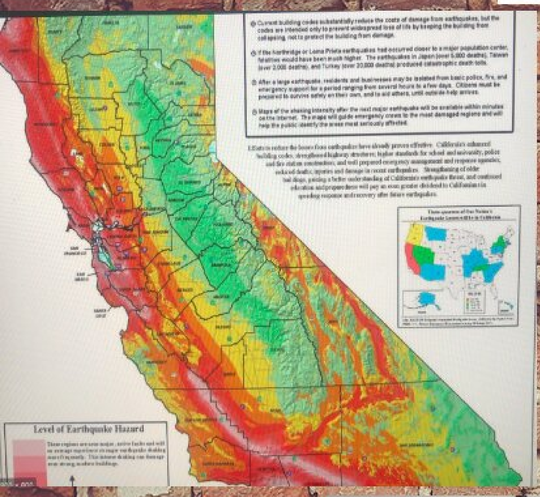
In Wait of The Big One

When the eventual "Big One" does strike California, it will have a large affect on major cities such as Los Angeles and San Fransisco, as well as along the fault as you can see in the map.



In the map to the left you can see precisely how bad the shaking will be along the San Andreas fault.

The affects of the Big One would be huge, it would affect everything from wild life to People. It would cause large fires, to affect nature and humans alike. (Blackett, 2016)

The shaking will be incredibly violent, and will go on for close to a minute. Buildings will be demolished, and many lives lost. The fires caused by the earthquakes will cause even more deaths by itself. (Jones, 2018)

With the additions of building regulations, that are made to try and help a building ride the wave of the earthquake. There is a lesser chance of a building to collapse. (Lin II, 2018)

It is also recommended that you try and strap anything that could be loose and heavy in your house to either a wall or floor. It is wise so that you can try to prevent being pinned or injured. (Lin II, 2018)

The Big One is something that every Californian has somewhere in the back of their mind. It is going to be a catastrophic event that hopefully pulls the best out of us, and we will rise to see a new day and be stronger as a people, we will rebuild as a community.
